Violence at Verrières!

All attempts to push south from Caen and secure Verrières Ridge have been repulsed by a stalwart German defense.

Despite an initial push by the South Saskatchewan Regiment; of the Canadian Second Infantry Division; the attack was faltered by torrential rain.

The ridge, now a muddish hellscape, rendered further Canadian advancement impossible; neither by foot nor by their supporting tanks.

The intervention of the heavens necessitated the return of supporting Hawker Typhoons to base.

The removal of air support caused the Canadians to be exposed to the full brunt of the encamped German forces. It is believed that a significant armoured force is dug in on the ridge.

A tenacious counter-attack from German Panzers forced the Saskatchewan regiment to fall back past their supporting line- they have reportedly suffered heavy casualties.

The ridge at Verrières holds vital strategic importance. The belt of high ground dominates the route to Falaise. Its capture would significantly ease the southwards advance of our troops.

The continued poor weather unfortunately gives the vile axis forces opportunity to strengthen their position still further; yet our boys shall not falter.

Coiled Cobra Fails to Spring

Continued bad weather across Normandy has forced yet more delays to the American's push south from Caen.

Showing an impatience for the stymied progress, US troops proceeded south without the benefit of air support. They were repelled by the enemy encampment at the village of Saint-Germain-sur-Sèves.

Their failure prompted a ferocious German counter-attack from tanks and infantry.

US casualties are extreme, numbering nearly one thousand out of action.

Further operations have been deemed impractical without the proper air support.

Once the weather clears, the larger operation to push south will begin in earnest.

U-Boat sunk at Brighton

Our frigates have sunk another U-boat off the shores of Brighton. This victory futher strengthens our Royal Navy's hold in the Channel.

HMS Curzon and HMS Ekins set upon the submerged terror with a barrage of depth-charges. The sub was unable to surface and its sinking resulted in a total loss of life.

This is the latest in a recent spate of U-boat encounters in the vicinity of Brighton. This one marks the third German Sub sank this month.

Our brave lads are continuing to show their superiority across the breadth of the Channel.
