ALLIED TROOPS HIT THE BEACHES

US, British and Canadian troops have landed in Normandy. After a brutal battle for control of the invasion beaches, troops have begun to push inland.

Sources inside SHAEF say that while some units have not achieved their D-Day objectives, progress is much better than expected.

Thousands of ships swarm back and forth across the channel, depositing vital loads of fuel, ammunition and other supplies to keep the advance moving.

BUTCHER BIRDS STRIKE BUILDUP

Two Fw190s struck troop and supply convoys moving off Sword Beach.

Eyewitnesses reported that many vehicles were left inoperable by the strafing run, which left several people dead and many more injured. Where were the RAF?!

BOMBARDMENT SHIP IN PERIL!

"E-Boat threat still very real" - Admiral Says

HMS Roberts was attacked by a squadron of E-Boats this morning - a threat that the RAF promised they had neutralised with their wonderous Tallboy bombs.

As the crew of the Roberts found out to their cost, the Kriegsmarine is far from out of the fight.

Thankfully, the crew of the Roberts were able to see off the enemy torpedo boats with their complement of anti-aircraft guns and small arms.

The question remains, how did these E-Boats escape?
